

Bullying

Bullying is wrong, and people shouldn't do it. The main reasons why they bully is because of problems at home, or to make themselves look cool in front of their friends. I think they shouldn't try to look cool by bullying. They can try another way. That's a little childish and kind of dumb. They also take their anger out on other people. They should go to an empty room, and scream as loud as they can to take the anger out. They can even go to anger management classes. They will help. Some people don't even try to bully. Sometimes, they are forced by their friends. That's why you have to choose who to talk or hang out with. If they force you to do something like that then they are not your true friends. If I see someone getting bullied, I help defend the person because it hurts to see that a person can't defend himself. He has to watch his back. It really does hurt me. That's why I help defend him. I also let him know everything is going to be fine, and he has nothing to worry about. I also tell him that if they mess with him again, just come and tell me, or you can tell a teacher.

I told a bully before that what he was doing wasn't right, and that he had hurt innocent people who never did anything to him. And maybe some of those people didn't have a mom or dad. They would have to take that pain home, and add it to more pain that they already have. I told the bully to imagine that he was in the position of being bullied every day for no reason, and it hurt. What goes around comes around. In the end, the bully usually ends up in jail doing time for bullying some innocent person. I never really knew I could touch a bully's heart with words, and he would stop bullying.

I actually stopped about two or three bullies before. I told them that, and they realized, and they felt bad and stopped bullying not just that person, but they stopped bullying in general. I felt proud of actually having the ability to convince some bullies that it was wrong what they were doing. I was proving a point, and telling them the truth.
