

Computers help us learn history because there is so much history on the Internet. For example, you can search Yahoo, and Google about anything you want to know. If you would like to know about the Alamo, then you could go to many websites for the information. If you like history, don't go and buy a book or pay too much money, just look it up on the Internet. The Internet will probably give you more information than the book. I remember buying a book about history for my Social Studies project, but it didn't give me enough information, so I just went to the Internet [Google] and put, "About the Alamo", and it gave me so much information. It gave me more information than the book I bought, and I understood it. And that's why I still use computers for any project I have. History may seem boring, but using the Internet makes it seem more interesting because you may think that its pretty cool or you might say, "WOW, this is awesome!" People use computers for many reasons. They are very interesting for people. In the future, computers will still be popular. If you want to know a lot about history, get a computer. You can even see videos about what happened a long time ago. How cool is that? Even YouTube.com has videos of history. Now as you can see, you can find so much history on the computer.
